Little Rock, AR- Treasurer of State Dennis Milligan announced the start of his initiative to make the Treasurer of State office more transparent to the people of Arkansas.

Milligan stated, "In light of recent events within this office I made a campaign promise to shine the light on the activities and operations of this office. Today with this first step we are keeping our promise to the people of Arkansas. We have released 13 reports in a new section of our website named 'Inside the Vault'."

"Every month we will be releasing via our website, artreasury.gov, various financial reports that focus on activities from each of our major divisions. As you will see we have reports on turn back funds, our investments and daily cash flow." Milligan continued.

Thirteen reports were uploaded on the Treasurer of State website this morning. These include reports on Distributions, Cash Management, Investments and Local Government Services. They can be found at www.artreasury.gov/inside-the-vault.html

This is the second campaign promise fulfilled by Milligan since taking office. On the first day he instituted his no gifts policy for him and his staff, which states "no one within the office may accept any gift of any amount from anyone doing or potentially doing business with the Treasurer of State office."
